SPLIT-SOLE FOOTWEAR

FIELD OF THE DISCLOSURE

The present disclosure relates to footwear and more specifically, split-sole shoes.

BACKGROUND

Conventional footwear has structural limitations that force the wearer to make difficult choices between style and comfort. As a result, many individuals endure significant foot pain, or elect to wear less attractive shoes or styles that may not be appropriate for the occasion. To address this problem, some women carry additional footwear in a car or large bag. However, a spare pair of conventional shoes is less than ideal because of size and bulk limitations on portability. Lightweight rollable or foldable shoes are available that offer increased portability. However, such products do not contain the support, durability, comfort or style desired in a non-foldable shoe.

Moreover, prior art foldable shoes have outsoles that do not adequately protect the shoe midsole and upper, leading to premature wear of the shoe including tearing and damage to the shoe. Furthermore, such shoes are typically flimsy or, in other words, do not provide adequate support or protection of the foot. For instance, many foldable shoes have an overall spring constant that is, depending on the brand and model, between 0.14 kilogram-force / inch and 0.34 kilogram-force / inch. Such shoes provide little or no resistance, protection and support, and thus are inadequate to wear for repeated or extended use, particularly outside or on rough terrain (e.g., dirty pavement, stones, etc.). Moreover, such shoes are not durable
